Subject: Microsoft Settlement

To whom it may concern my name is Jon Park and I have been reading the news concerning this settlement and I feel what Microsoft wants is what Microsoft gets LITERALLY they seem to have every one of influence on their payroll/side (please choose the word you like best).

I agree that Microsoft could be dealt with harshly recently they made a statement to the effect that software pirates/crackers/virus writers are terrorists of sorts and will do what it takes to protect us from them. Has any one thought that maybe their practices of running out the competition by any means possible (I would like to bring to point the fact they lied to the courts on whom they were in contact with during proceedings) borders if not cross that line that defines terrorism.

Or are business terrorist tactics ok as long as money is made and no physical harm is committed to any persons.

They seem as big a threat to the health of our economy, face it any strings they decide to pull effects us all, from centralizing computer platform development to serve their software only - to pulling the plug on a contract with a video game supplier because they decided to enter the market, I am sure the Japanese market didn't respond well to that.

I just had a thought the slogan for Microsoft should be "We want more" sounds like they don't it. Most companies compete not run over to earn success and notoriety.

I vote for harsher punishment.

Thank You

Sincerely,
Jon Park
